Lincoln's Last Law Case.
From the Chicago Record-Herald.
Lincoln tried his last case in Chicago. It was the case of Jones vs. Johnson in April 1906. In the United States circuit court, before Judge Drummond. The case involved the title to land of Lake Michigan. During the trial Judge Drummond and all the counsel on both sides, including Lincoln, dined together at the house of Isaac N. Arnold. At the conclusion of the dinner this toast was proposed: "May Illinois furnish the next President of the United States." It was drunk with great enthusiasm by the guests of both Lincoln and Douglas. Thousands of situations have been obtained through the want columns of The Star.

THE TRIAL OF HAYWOOD

Senator Borah Continued His Argument Today

FOR PROSECUTION AT BOISE

DETAILS OF GREAT CONSPIRACY

Pinkerton Connection With Crimes

Scouted as Absurd—Courtroom Packed Beyond Comfortableness.

BOISE, July 26.—Senator Borah continued his argument for the prosecution in the Haywood trial this morning.

As early as 7 o'clock the courtroom doors were besieged by hundreds seeking admittance to the crowded courtroom, Senator Borah being popular as an orator in this his home city. So great was the throng that court officials and others having business at the trial had to find their way into the building by devious ways, most of them climbing a steep improvised stairway in the rear. The jury was also brought up these stairs.

Inside the court, as the next to the last day of the trial began, Haywood sat surrounded by his family. His invalid wife, whose helpless condition and pallid face have attracted so much attention and sympathy, sat immediately at his right, and next to her was the gray-haired mother, who, on yesterday could not restrain the tears which welled to her eyes as Clarence Darrow of Chicago made the last plea for the life of her son. The prisoner's daughter and sister were also in the family circle, the only absentees being the little ten-year-old girl, Henrietta.

Mrs. Frank J. Steenberg, the wife of the murdered governor, and her stalwart son, Julian, were early in the courtroom, and when they had been shown to seats inside the courtroom, they remained there until seven or eight feet of Haywood himself. Attorneys from cities in the west have come to Boise for the last arguments and constituted a large proportion of today's big audience. When the last seats were occupied, hundreds remained on the courthouse lawn to catch what they could of Senator Borah's speech as the words filtered out of the windows.

Senator Borah began by reviewing briefly the points made in the opening hour of his address to the jury last night. He said he would go back to the trail of blood left by Harry Orchard, taking first the murder of Gov. Steenberg and harking back over some of the most important incidents developed in the testimony.

Detective Story Absurd.

"I hardly need to tell you sensible men," declared the speaker, "that Pinkerton detectives had nothing to do with the assassination of Frank Steenberg. That is one of the most absurd of the many absurd things brought into this case by the learned counsel for the defense.

Senator Borah, in laying the foundation for his argument of conspiracy, pointed out that Orchard went to Caldwell from Denver and fresh from association with the officer of the Western Federation of Miners, who regarded Steenberg as an enemy. Then he touched upon the fact that Marion Moore, an officer of the Western Federation of Miners, in testifying for the defense, admitted that he agreed with Orchard to develop the case of his wife when Orchard wished to desert her.

"Harry Orchard left Denver with crime in his heart. The impelling, compelling force came from George Pettibone, who helped Orchard pack his utensils of murder in his trunk. Why is Pettibone not here to defend himself? He is not here because he is guilty. Pettibone's absence is an absolute corroboration of Orchard."

Orchard's Personal Motive.

Taking up the question of the personal motive the defense had charged against Orchard, Senator Borah showed the jury the deed by which Orchard had parted absently and forever with his interest in the Hercules mines fourteen months before Gen. Merriam and his negro troops marched into the Coeur d'Alenes.

"This deed, the letters and telegrams and all the other evidence not subject to being tampered with in this case corroborate Harry Orchard's and fit in precisely with the story he has told you. Gov. Steenberg did not cause Orchard to lose his interest in the mine, so how could he have entertained a murderous grudge?"

The senator took up one by one the witnesses for the defense who he said corroborated Orchard, and proved a criminal conspiracy because they had covered and protected Orchard up to the time he confessed and implicated Haywood.

Borah Commences.

Clarence Darrow closed his argument for the defense last night after talking eleven hours. He was followed at the night session by Senator Borah.

"I am aware," said Senator Borah, "that I am in this case as a special prosecutor. The learned counsel on the other side has impressed this fact upon you. But let me say that the state which does not protect its citizens or punish wrongdoers would not lose the respect of a civilized people and have no standing in our civilization."

"But counsel has gone further with my associate. Why they should attack Mr. Haywood, who went fearlessly into the investigation of the matter; why they should assault in a personal way a man who has practiced law in this country for forty years, and whose loyalty, whose honesty has never been questioned, I do not know. It is usually thought that an attack on a man's argument to do away with his logic, but running through this case is an attack upon every one, be he high or low, who has had anything to do with, or been in any way associated with, the investigation of the crime of December 30, 1905."

"Have you men heard anybody on the streets of Boise asking for the blood of William D. Haywood, regardless of his guilt? Is it not the blood of Dawson? Credit of the people of Idaho that, despite the fact that one of our most distinguished citizens murdered another, there has been here an outcry for anything but justice, and justice after an absolutely fair and impartial trial. You men know it, and by now I think the world knows it. You know it when you lifted your hands to heaven and took your oath of service, and it is all that the state asks of you in this its closing hour."

"We are not here fighting organized labor. We are not here fighting the weak or the poor. Neither are we here to consent that organized labor shall be a shield to crime. This is not an industrial war, as my eloquent friend of the defense would have you believe. We are not arraying class against class, or one phase of society against another. This is not a battle of the rich against the poor or the poor against the rich. We are here in the interest of law, of justice, of fairness. That is all."

Says Trail Leads to Haywood.

Senator Borah here plunged directly into the assassination of Steenberg. He declared Orchard had planted a bomb, and he had done many times before. He was an old and experienced criminal, and he was not alone in the commission of the crime.

"If," he cried, "you stand at the gate of Frank Steenberg, broken and stained with his own blood, and if to there you follow the devious way of Harry Orchard you will find that the trail of blood passes up the stairway in Denver; up which Orchard ran that day while the darky held his horse at the curb below."

The defense would have you believe that, notwithstanding what I have said, what Pettibone may have done, what Simpson may have done, or what Orchard may have done, Haywood is not guilty. But the law says that when men knowingly join together to commit a crime the act of one is the act of all. It is not an answer that other may be at the time of the commission of the crime. It is not an answer to our charge for the attorneys for the defense to say: 'We care nothing for Jack Simpson; let him go overboard. We care

20 FEET OF WIRE NEAR HEART.

Aneurism Seems to Be Cured When All This Is Removed.

PHILADELPHIA, July 26.—Nature and a silver wire twenty feet long saved the life of Fred Williams at the end of one of the most remarkable operations on record. It was for aneurism of the aorta, and was performed upon Williams in the Medical-Chirurgical Hospital by Dr. James P. Mann.

Williams, who is thirty-nine years old, a barber and a man of immense vitality, noticed a swelling on his breast. The barber went to the hospital, and there was placed upon the operating table without having been etherized. A hollow needle was plunged into the aorta, and through this the silver wire was fed from a spool. The thickness of the wire was about that of a No. 60 cotton thread.

As the wire was fed into the great blood vessel it coiled itself close in the form of a cylinder, which fitted exactly the inner surface of the effected parts. Then the needle was withdrawn and the little wound made by it was dressed.

The process that was then set up in the weakened part was that the blood clotted over the wires and "organized" a new wall, strengthening that which had been weakened by the rheumatic growth. The efficacy of this "organization" depends upon the general condition of the patient and the quality of his blood.

The operation upon Williams was performed two months ago. Last week he came into the hospital with blood trickling from a point hole in his chest. Again Williams was placed on the operating table. The blood was found to be coming from a wound from which protruded the tip of the silver wire that had been coiled inside his aorta. With great care the whole strand was taken out, and then to the amazement of everybody the wound stopped.

There is every indication that the barber is now absolutely well, and that the inner coating of the aorta is sufficiently strong to reinforce the weakened tissue that lies outside it.

Arrests Husband and Pays His Fine.

From the Duluth News-Tribune.

Mrs. James Dunlop secured a warrant the other day charging her husband with assault, made the arrest herself and then when her rate spouse was found guilty in municipal court she paid his fine and took him home with her.

"Well, this is really the most novel affair in the way of dealing out justice that has ever been brought to my official attention," said Judge Windom. "When I imposed the fine of $10 and costs I was not aware that the wife was going to foot the bill, but she has done so."

Mr. and Mrs. Dunlop reside on Mesaba avenue, and have a number of children. He is a laborer and when not drinking is a good husband. Recently, however, he went away on a "todd" and did not show up at home until the other day. His wife upbraided him for his action and he slapped her.

"For the children's sake I do not care to have my husband go to jail," Mrs. Dunlop told the court. "When I got out the warrant I intended to let him serve out a sentence, but thoughts of the little ones forced me to change my mind."

The Luxury of War.

From the World Today.

We all have our luxuries. Some of us have our steam yachts, some our automobiles, some our books, and some of us our bad habits; but luxuries we must have, cost what they will. So, too, with the world. It has its luxury-war.

Of course, all good Christians believe that men ought not to fight, but so do we believe that men ought not to spend money for things they cannot afford. But there are always extenuating circumstances, and it is always easier to run in debt for luxuries than for necessities.

In the days of the Roman empire a standard army of 120,000 men kept order in the country surrounding the Mediterranean. That, of course, was before we achieved our present high civilization. In these same countries today the army probably 2,000,000 men under arms, and as many more in Germany and Russia.

But Rome was relatively poor. All of these men have been taken from industry at the age when they ought to be learning their trades. They have to be supported by the state or have to live off of other people. But an army is a luxury which civilization enjoys. All the world, and especially every woman, loves a uniform.

Dog Steals a Ride.

From the Boston Herald.

A sagacious dog is able to beat the railroads and the anti-pass legislation if men cannot.

A story is told by railroad men about a dog which boards passenger trains and, under a seat, rides to Boston. After a run about the streets of the city, frequenting his favorite haunts, he returns to the station, plays his trick once again and lands home safe and happy. How he is able to pick out the right trains and why he does not get aboard an express and get carried by his home station is a mystery.

BREAKING UP A WASP NEST.

Insects Will All Go to Their Death in a Jug of Hot Water.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Most people think of hornets and yellow jackets as strictly country products, but as a fact the big vegetable gardens in the southwestern part of the city are very well supplied with both," says a St. Louis truck farmer.

"Of course at this season of the year they give very little trouble, but in the autumn, when fall plowing is in progress, it is a very common thing to turn up a nest of ground wasps, and then there is generally a runaway in two directions, for the wasps are ill-tempered when disturbed and attack both the farmer and his horse; the latter takes one direction and the farmer makes for the other."

"It is a very easy matter to exterminate the wasps before beginning to plow, so when a gardener notices there is a nest of them anywhere on his land he prepares for them before it is too late. He takes a common earthenware jug about half full of very hot water, sets it on a fire to heat, and then he takes a pair of gloves, covers his head and neck with a handkerchief, and goes to the nest with a pail of water and a long pole."

The wasps come out by hundreds and, seeing nothing but water, they jump into it. The hot water kills them, but those that are not immediately drowned keep up a tremendous buzzing, which seems to exasperate still further all the wasps within hearing, and it looks as though they would get into the jug fast enough. I have seen a jug taken up more than a thousand times and poured out, and the wasps were still coming out of the jug after a raid, for so long as a wasp is left he makes for the mouth of the jug, and the whole nest can be exterminated in this way. It is a silver wire that has been coiled inside his aorta. With great care the whole strand was taken out, and then to the amazement of everybody the wound stopped.

There is every indication that the barber is now absolutely well, and that the inner coating of the aorta is sufficiently strong to reinforce the weakened tissue that lies outside it.

Zone of Silver.

From the London Chronicle.

The statement of the Jebba's captain that he did not hear the guns which are fired from the Eddystone in foggy weather reminds a correspondent of the interesting series of experiments made at St. Catherine's Point, Isle of Wight, six years ago by the Trinity House fog signal committee, with a view of finding out the best means of warning vessels off a rocky shore. Various noisy signals were tried, but none was found that would infallibly answer under all conditions of weather. More than this, the committee made the startling discovery that on the calmest and clearest day there sometimes existed a "soundless zone," an area through which sound could not penetrate. This, however, never discovered the reason for this, and the "soundless zone" is at present a mystery.

Hale and Active at 101.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

James Carne, verger of the Church of St. Columba and parish clerk of St. Columba Minor, Cornwall, celebrates his 101st birthday. Three generations of the Carne family have held the same office for 167 years, and his grandfather, John Carne, who died in 1801, aged eighty years, served fifty years as a vergor, and was followed by his son John, who died at the age of eighty-four, after a service in the church of fifty-four years. He retired in 1843 in favor of the present vergor, who until seven years ago never missed a service, the death of his wife causing then a break in his marvelous record. Mr. Carne is still hale and active and until seven years ago had no use for glasses. He detests tobacco and takes only a glass of port as a tonic.

When Mr. Carne became vergor he had to march up and down the aisle of the church leading the choir with his flute, and later on a clarinet, a flute and a big bass violin were added, with later on a cornet. The practices were held an hour before the time of service in the parlor of the inn nearby. Bridge's hymn, "Oh, Be Joyful," was sung in the church every Sunday for fifty consecutive years before it was superseded by another by the same composer.

NEW BASS HOOK.

Once Caught, It Is Impossible for This Wily Fish to Get Away.

Desciples of Isaac Walton will be interested in a new casting line recently patented by a Chicago man. This hook is for game fish only, the idea being to have the bait flexible. In use a bass strikes the bait and holding it in his mouth does not feel the jerk of the bait when the fisherman pulls on the line. If the fish does not have a good hold the bait is not pulled out of the mouth, but on the contrary, the pull is on the hook. In the illustration the hook is shown baited with the customary pork rind. You get a strike from a bass, pike or muskellunge, you give your rod a quick reverse motion to hook him, as is always proper when using dead or artificial bait. The reason is the strain on the bait is taken up by the spring, and you don't deliberately jerk your bait from the mouth of the fish. He has hooked the pull, but the hook is drawn into his mouth. "Side biter" can't get away. "Short biter" must strike over the hook to get at the bait. It will be noticed that the hook passes entirely through the bait, the upper end of the bait being hooked on the smaller hook.
